Synonyms: affection, air, assumption, cloak, color, disguise, dissimulation, excuse, mask, pretension, pretext, ruse, seeming, semblance, show, simulation. A pretense, in the unfavorable and usual sense, is something advanced or displayed for the purpose of concealing the reality. A person makes a pretense of something for the credit or advantage to be gained by it; he makes what is allowed or approved a pretext for doing what would be opposed or condemned; a tricky schoolboy makes a pretense of doing an errand which he does not do, or he makes the actual doing of an errand a pretext for playing truant. A ruse is something employed to blind or deceive so as to mask an ulterior design, and enable a person to gain some end that he would not be allowed to approach directly. A pretension is a claim that is or may be contested; the word is now commonly used in an unfavorable sense. See DISGUISE, HYPOCRISY. Antonyms: actuality, candor, fact, guilelessness, honesty, ingenuousness, openness, reality, simplicity, sincerity, truth.

pre·ven·ient (pri·vēn′yənt) adj. 1 Preceding or preventing. 2 Anticipatory; expectant. [<L praeveniens, -entis, ppr. of praevenire. See PREVENT.] pre·vent (pri·vent′) v.t. 1 To keep from happening, as by previous measures or preparations; preclude; thwart. 2 To keep from doing something; forestall; hinder. 3 Obs. To anticipate; precede. [<L praeventus; pp. of praevenire precede, come before, anticipate <prae- before + venire come] — pre·vent′a·ble or pre·vent′i·ble adj. — pre·vent′a·bil′i·ty or pre·vent′i·bil′i·ty n. — pre·vent′er n.

Synonyms: anticipate, forestall. The original sense of prevent, to go or come before, act in advance of, now practically obsolete, was still in good use when the authorized version of the Bible was made, as appears in such passages as "Thou preventest him with the blessings of goodness" (that is, by sending the blessings before the desire is formulated or expressed), Ps. xxi 3. Anticipate is now the only single word usable in this sense; to forestall is to take or act in advance in one's own behalf and to the prejudice or hindrance of another. But to anticipate is very frequently used in the favorable sense; as, his thoughtful kindness anticipated my wish (that is, met the wish before it was expressed); or one anticipates a payment (by making it before the time). For the present use of prevent, see synonyms for HINDER[1], PRECLUDE, PROHIBIT.

pre·ven·tion (pri·ven′shən) n. 1 The act of preventing. 2 A hindrance; obstruction. 3 A preventive.

pre·ven·tive (pri·ven′tiv) adj. Intended or serving to ward off harm, diseases, etc.: preventive medicine. — n. That which prevents or hinders, as a medicine to ward off disease; a precautionary measure. pre·view (prē′vyōō′) n. 1 An advance showing, as of a motion picture, a fashion show, etc., to invited guests before it is presented publicly. 2 In motion pictures, the showing of scenes or parts of scenes to advertise a coming picture.

pre·vi·ous (prē′vē·əs) adj. 1 Being or taking place before something else in time or order; antecedent; prior to. 2 Colloq. Acting, occurring, or speaking too soon; premature. [<L praevius going before <prae- before + via way, road] — pre′vi·ous·ly adv. — pre′vi·ous·ness n.

Synonyms: antecedent, anterior, earlier, foregoing, former, precedent, preceding, preliminary, prior. Antecedent may denote simple priority in time, implying no direct connection between that which goes before and that which follows; as, the striking of one clock may be always antecedent to the striking of another with no causal connection between them. Antecedent and previous may refer to that which goes or happens at any distance in advance, preceding is limited to that which is immediately or next before; an antecedent event may have happened at any time before; the preceding transaction is the one completed just before the one with which it is compared; a previous statement or chapter may be in any part of the book that has gone before; the preceding statement or chapter comes next before without an interval. Foregoing is used only of that which is spoken or written; as, the foregoing statements. Anterior, while it can be used of time, is coming to be employed chiefly with reference to place; as, the anterior lobes of the brain. Prior bears exclusive reference to time, and commonly where that which is first in time is first also in right; as, a prior demand. Former is used of time, or of position in written or printed matter, not of space in general. We say former times, a former chapter, etc. Former has a close relation, or sharp contrast, with something following; the former always implies the latter, even when not fully expressed. Compare ANTECEDENT. Antonyms: after, concluding, consequent, following, hind, hinder, hindmost, later, latter, posterior, subsequent, succeeding.

price (prīs) n. 1 An equivalent given or asked in exchange; valuation; cost (to the buyer). 2 Anything given or done to obtain something: Death is the price of glory. 3 The quality of possessing value; worth; especially, high value. 4 A bribe or anything used for a bribe. 5 A reward for the capture or death of. — beyond price 1 So valuable that no adequate price can be set; priceless. 2 Unbribable. — market price The price that something will bring in the open market. — to set a price on one's head To offer a reward for the capture of a person, dead or alive. — v.t. priced, pric·ing 1 To ask the price of. 2 To set a price on; value; appraise. [<OF pris <L pretium. Related to PRAISE.]

Synonyms (noun): charge, cost, expenditure, expense, outlay, value, worth. The cost of a thing is all that has been expended upon it, whether in discovery, production, refinement, decoration, transportation, or otherwise, to bring it to its present condition in the hands of its present possessor; the price of a thing is what the seller asks for it. Price always implies that an article is for sale; what a man will not sell he declines to put a price on. Value is the estimated equivalent for an article, whether the article is for sale or not; the market value is what something would bring if it were for sale in the open market; the intrinsic value is the inherent worth of the article considered by itself alone; the market value of an old and rare volume may be very great, while its intrinsic value may be practically nothing. Value has always more reference to others' estimation (literally, what the thing will avail with others) than worth, which regards the thing in and by itself; thus, intrinsic value is a weaker expression than intrinsic worth. Charge has especial reference to services, expense to outlays; as, the charges of a lawyer or physician; traveling expenses, etc.

Price may appear as a combining form in hyphemes or solidemes, or as the first element in two-word phrases:

Sometimes as and but are regarded as relative pronouns: Such men as survived the accident; There is not a man but remembers that day. ◆ The relative pronouns who (with its inflected forms whose and whom), which, and what, are identical in form with the interrogative pronouns but they undergo shifts of meaning in interrogative use, often being indefinite and general in reference: What (if anything or of all possible things) is he talking about? But: He is talking about what (specifically) he knows best. These pronouns, when used to introduce an indirect question, are by nature both relative and interrogative: They asked what he wanted; whom he preferred as a colleague; which party he belonged to. Similarly, that is not only a demonstrative but a relative pronoun and it makes a specific and limiting reference in either use.

pro·po·sal (prə·pō′zəl) n. 1 An offer proposing something to be accepted or adopted. 2 An offer of marriage. 3 Something proposed, as a scheme or plan.

Synonyms: bid, offer, overture, proposition. An offer or proposal puts something before one for acceptance or rejection, proposal being the more formal word; a proposition sets forth truth (or what is claimed to be truth) in formal statement. The proposition is for consideration, the proposal for action; as, a proposition in geometry, a proposal of marriage; but proposition is often used nearly in the sense of proposal when it is a matter for deliberation; as, a proposition for the surrender of a fort. A bid is commercial and often verbal; as, a bid at an auction. An overture opens negotiation or conference, and the word is especially used of some movement toward reconciliation; as, overtures of peace. See synonyms under DESIGN. Antonyms: acceptance, decision, denial, refusal, rejection, repulse.

pro·pose (prə·pōz′) v. ·posed, ·pos·ing v.t. 1 To put forward for acceptance or consideration. 2 To nominate, as for admission or appointment. 3 To intend; purpose. 4 To suggest the drinking of (a toast or health). —v.i. 5 To form or announce a plan or design. 6 To make an offer, as of marriage. [<OF proposer <pro- forth (<L) + poser. See POSE[1].] —pro·pos′er n.

Synonym: purpose. In its most frequent use, propose differs from purpose in that what we purpose lies in our own mind as a decisive act of will, a determination; what we propose is offered or stated to others. In this use of the word, what we propose is open to deliberation, as what we purpose is not. In another use of the word one proposes something to or by himself which may or may not be stated to others. In this latter sense propose is nearly identical with purpose. See PLAN, PURPOSE.

prop·o·si·tion (prop′ə·zish′ən) n. 1 A scheme or proposal offered for consideration or acceptance. 2 U.S. Colloq. Any matter or person to be dealt with: a tough proposition. 3 Colloq. An indecent or immodest proposal. 4 A subject or statement presented for discussion. 5 Logic A statement in which something (the subject) is affirmed or denied in terms of something else (the predicate), the two being related usually by a copula. In the propositions, Grass is green and Grass is not red, grass in each case is the subject and green and red are the predicates respectively. 6 Math. A statement of a truth to be demonstrated (a theorem) or of an operation to be performed (a problem). See synonyms under PROPOSAL. —v.t. Colloq. To make an improper suggestion to. [<OF <L propositio, -onis a setting forth <propositus, pp. of proponere. See PROPONENT.] —prop′o·si′tion·al adj. —prop′o·si′tion·al·ly adv.

See synonyms under PERPLEX. — to puzzle over To attempt to understand or solve. — n. 1 A thing difficult to understand or explain; perplexing problem; an enigma or problem. 2 Something, as a toy, purposely arranged so as to require time, patience, and ingenuity to solve its intricacies. 3 The state of being puzzled; a quandary; perplexity. See synonyms under RIDDLE[2]. — cross-word puzzle A pattern of white and black spaces, of which the white spaces are to be filled with letters that form words, vertically, horizontally, or diagonally, to agree with accompanying definitions. [Related to ME poselet confused; ult. origin unknown] puz·zle·ment (puz′əl·mənt) n. State of being nonplused; perplexity.

puz·zler (puz′lər) n. One who or that which puzzles; a knotty question.
PX A military post exchange or general store. [<P(OST) (E)X(CHANGE)] py- Var. of PYO-.
Pya·ti·gorsk (pyä′ti·gôrsk′) A city in the northern Caucasus, Russian S.F.S.R. pyc·nid·i·um (pik·nid′ē·əm) n. pl. ·nid·i·a (-nid′ē·ə) Bot. A spore-bearing receptacle found in certain fungi. [<NL <Gk. pyknos thick + -idion, dim. suffix] — pyc·nid′i·al adj.
pyc·nom·e·ter (pik·nom′ə·tər) n. A specific-gravity bottle or flask. [<Gk. pyknos dense, thick + -METER] pyc·no·spore (pik′nə·spôr, -spōr) n. Bot. A conidium developed within a pycnidium. [Contraction of pycnidiospore <PYCNIDIUM + SPORE] Pyd·na (pid′nə) An ancient city in south central Macedonia, Greece; scene of the final Roman victory over Macedonia, 168 B.C. pye (pī) See PIE⁴.
py·e·li·tis (pī′ə·lī′tis) n. Pathol. Inflammation of the pelvis and calices of the kidneys. [<NL <Gk. pyelos the pelvis, orig. a trough + -itis -ITIS] — py′e·lit′ic (-lit′ik) adj.
py·e·lo·gram (pī′ə·lō·gram′) n. A picture taken by pyelography. [<pyelo- <Gk. pyelos a trough, pelvis + -GRAM] py·e·log·ra·phy (pī′ə·log′rə·fē) n. The technique of making X-rays of the ureter and the kidney by the use of a radiopaque dye. [<pyelo- <Gk. pyelos a trough, pelvis + -GRAPHY] — py′e·lo·graph′ic (-lō·graf′ik) adj.
py·e·mi·a (pī·ē′mē·ə) n. Pathol. A poisonous infection of the blood, due to the absorption of vitiated pus or pyogenic micro-organisms into the circulation: it causes suppuration marked by multiple abscesses, phlebitis, high fever, etc. Also py·ae′mi·a. [<NL <Gk. pyon pus + haima blood] — py·e′mic adj.
py·et (pī′it) n. Scot. The magpie.
py·gid·i·um (pī·jid′ē·əm) n. pl. ·gid·i·a (-jid′·ē·ə) Entomol. The terminal or posterior segment, as of an insect; a caudal shield. [< NL <Gk. pygidion, dim. of pygē rump] — py·gid′i·al adj.
Pyg·ma·li·on (pig·mā′lē·ən, -māl′yən) In Greek mythology, a sculptor of Cyprus, who fell in love with his statue, Galatea, which Aphrodite later brought to life.
pyg·my (pig′mē) See PIGMY.
Pyg·my (pig′mē) n. pl. ·mies 1 A member of a Negroid people of equatorial Africa, ranging in height from four to five feet. 2 Any of the Negrito peoples of the Philippines, Andaman Islands, and Malaya. 3 In the Iliad, one of a race of dwarfs. [<L pygmaeus. See PIGMY.]
py·ic (pī′ik) adj. Of or pertaining to pus; purulent. [<PY- + -IC] py·in (pī′in) n. Biochem. A protein compound contained in pus. [<PY- + -IN] py·ja·mas (pə·jä′məz, -jam′əz) See PAJAMAS. pyke (pīk) v.t. Scot. To pick.
pyk·nic (pik′nik) adj. Characterized by plump contours and a broad, stocky build; fat; squat. — n. A person of this physical type. [<Gk. pyknos thick, compact] pyk·no·phra·si·a (pik′nə·frā′zhē·ə, -zhə) n. Pathol. A thickening of speech. [<NL <Gk. pyknos thick + phrasis speech] Pyl·a·des (pil′ə·dēz) In Greek legend, a nephew of Agamemnon and friend of Orestes, whose sister Electra he married.
pyle (pīl) n. Scot. A grain.
Pyle (pīl), Howard, 1853–1911, U.S. illustrator, painter, and writer.
py·lon (pī′lon) n. 1 Archit. A monumental structure constituting an entrance to an Egyptian temple or other large edifice, consisting of a central gateway, flanked on each side by a truncated pyramidal tower. 2 A stake marking the course in an airdrome or turning point in an aerial race. 3 One of the tall, mastlike metal structures from whose summits high-tension wires are carried across open country. 4 Surg. An artificial leg, usually temporary. [<Gk. pylōn a gateway <pylē a gate] py·lo·rec·to·my (pī′lə·rek′tə·mē) n. Surg. Excision of the pylorus. [<PYLOR(US) + -ECTOMY] py·lo·rus (pī·lôr′əs, -lō′rəs, pi-) n. pl. ·ri (-rī) Anat. The opening between the stomach and the duodenum, surrounded by circular muscle fibers; also, the adjoining portion of the stomach. [<LL <Gk. pylōros ▪ gatekeeper <pylē a gate + ouros a watcher] — py·lor′ic (-lôr′ik, -lor′ik) adj.
Py·los (pī′los) 1 A port of SW Peloponnesus, Greece, at the southern entrance to Pylos Bay. 2 An ancient city, 4 miles NW of modern Pylos; said to be the seat of Nestor. Medieval Navarino: also Pilos. Latin Py·lus (pī′ləs).
Pym (pim), John, 1584–1643, English statesman and orator. pyo- combining form Pus; of or related to pus: pyorrhea. Also, before vowels, py-. [<Gk. pyon pus] py·o·gen·e·sis (pī′ō·jen′ə·sis) n. 1 Pathol. The formation or secretion of pus; suppuration. 2 The doctrine or theory of the origin, source, and process of the generation of pus. — py′o·gen′ic adj.
py·oid (pī′oid) adj. Resembling pus; purulent. [<PY- + -OID] Pyong·yang (pyông·yäng) A city in northern Korea, capital of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea: Japanese Hei·jo (hā·jō). py·or·rhe·a (pī′ə·rē′ə) n. Pathol. A discharge of pus with a continuous flow; especially, pyorrhea al·ve·o·la·ris (al·vē′ō·lā′ris), ▪ loosening of the teeth accompanied by progressive inflammation of their lining membrane; Riggs's disease. Also py′or·rhoe′a. [<NL <Gk. pys, pyos pus + rheein flow] — py′or·rhe′al adj.
py·o·sis (pī·ō′sis) n. Suppuration. [<NL <Gk. pyōsis <pys, pyos pus] pyr- Var. of PYRO-.
py·ra·can·tha (pī′rə·kan′thə, pir′ə-) n. The firethorn. [<L <Gk. pyrakantha <pyr, pyros fire + akantha, -ēs a thorn] py·ral·i·did (pi·ral′ə·did) adj. Of or pertaining to a family (Pyralididae) of small or medium-sized moths of slender build and broad hind wings, including many groups sometimes classified as separate families. — n. A moth belonging to this family. Also pyr·a·lid (pir′ə·lid). [<NL <L pyralis, -idis a winged insect supposed to live in fire <Gk. <pyr, pyros a fire] — py·ral′i·dan adj. & n.
pyr·a·mid (pir′ə·mid) n. 1 Archit. A solid structure of masonry with a square base and triangular sides meeting in an apex. Such structures were used as tombs or temples. The pyramids of Egypt, raised over the sepulchral chambers of kings, are the best examples. The most interesting group is at Giza, near Cairo. The pyramids of Mexico served as temples. The largest is the pyramid near Cholula on the Pueblo plateau, in central Mexico. 2 Something in pyramidal form. 3 Geom. A solid consisting of a polygonal base and triangular sides, the apices of the triangles coming together at the vertex. 4 Mineral. A crystal form consisting of three or more similar planes having a common point of intersection. 5 Physiol. One of various pyramidal or conical structures found in animal organisms. 6 Anat. A small bony projection in the cavity of the tympanum. 7 Any tree trained in pyramidal form. 8 The operations involved in pyramiding. — v.t. & v.i. 1 To arrange or form in the shape of a pyramid. 2 To buy or sell (stock) with paper profits shown by the change in price of stock already purchased or sold, without any additional deposit of money being made, and to continue so buying or selling on each movement in price. [<F pyramide <L pyramis, -idis <Gk. pyramis, -idos, prob. <Egyptian pi-mar ▪ pyramid] py·ram·i·dal (pi·ram′ə·dəl) adj. Of or shaped like a pyramid. Also pyr·a·mid·ic (pir′ə·mid′ik), pyr′a·mid′i·cal. — py·ram′i·dal·ly adv.

py·ram·i·da·lis (pi·ram′i·dā′lis) n. pl. ·les (-lēz) Anat. Any one of several conical or triangular muscles; especially, the flat triangular muscle arising from the pubis and inserted into the linea alba. [<NL <LL, pyramidal; with ref. to its shape] Pyr·a·mus and This·be (pir′ə·məs, thiz′bē) In classical legend, two Babylonian lovers: believing Thisbe slain by a lion, Pyramus killed himself, and Thisbe, finding his body, took her own life.
py·ran (pī′ran, pi·ran′) n. Chem. Either of two isomeric cyclic compounds, C_5H_6O, each having in its ring 5 carbon atoms: the parent forms of certain carbohydrates, alkaloids, and other physiologically active compounds. [< PYRONE] py·ra·nom·e·ter (pī′rə·nom′ə·tər) n. An instrument for measuring sky radiation or radiation from the earth, especially at night. [< PYR- + ANO- + -METER] py·rar·gy·rite (pī·rär′jə·rīt) n. A metallic, black sulfide of antimony and silver, Ag_3SbS_3, crystallizing in the rhombohedral system. [<PYR- + Gk. argyros silver + -ITE¹] pyre (pīr) n. 1 A heap of combustibles arranged for burning a dead body. 2 Any pile or heap of combustible material. [<L pyra a hearth, funeral pile <Gk. <pyr a fire] py·rene¹ (pī′rēn) n. Chem. A tetracyclic hydrocarbon, $C_{16}H_{10}$, contained in that portion of coal-tar oil boiling above 360° C. [<PYR- + -ENE] py·rene² (pī′rēn) n. Bot. The stone of a drupe; also, any nutlet; putamen. [<NL pyrena <Gk. pyrēn fruit stone] Py·rene (pī′rēn) n. Carbon tetrachloride, prepared for use as a chemical fire extinguisher: a trade name.
Pyr·e·nees (pir′ə·nēz) A mountain chain between France and Spain, extending about 270 miles from the Bay of Biscay to the Mediterranean; highest point, Pico de Aneto, 11,168 feet. — Pyr′e·ne′an adj.
py·re·noid (pī·rē′noid) adj. Having the form of a fruit stone. — n. 1 Bot. A small, colorless mass of protein substance of a crystalline form, appearing in the chloroplasts of green algae. 2 Zool. A transparent body in the chromatophores of certain protozoa. [<Gk. pyrēnoeidēs <pyrēn a fruit stone + eidos a form, shape] — py·re·no·de·an (pī′ri·nō′dē·ən) adj.
Py·re·no·my·ce·tes (pī·rē′nō·mī·sē′tēz) n. pl. A large class of fungi characterized by the forcible expulsion of ascospores from the perithecium, including many parasitic species, as ergot. [<NL <Gk. pyrēn a fruit stone + mykēs, mykētis a mushroom] py·reth·rum (pī·reth′rəm, -rē′thrəm) n. 1 The dried and powdered roots of the pellitory used in medicine as a sialogog and rubefacient. 2 The powdered flowers of a chrysanthemum (Chrysanthemum cinerariaefolium), used medically as an ointment, and as an insecticide. [<L, feverfew <Gk. pyrethron <pyr fire] py·ret·ic (pī·ret′ik) adj. 1 Affected with or relating to fever; febrile. 2 Remedial in fevers. — n. A febrifuge. [<NL pyreticus <Gk. pyretos a fever <pyr fire] pyr·e·tol·o·gy (pir′ə·tol′ə·jē, pī′rə-) n. The department of medical science that treats of fevers. [<Gk. pyretos a fever + -LOGY] — pyr′e·tol′o·gist n.
pyr·e·to·ther·a·py (pir′ə·tō·ther′ə·pē, pī′rə-) n. Medical treatment by the artificial induction of fever by electricity, bacterial infection, etc.; fever therapy. [<Gk. pyretos (a fever) + THERAPY] Py·rex (pī′reks) n. A type of heat-resisting glass having a high silica content, with additions of soda, aluminum, and boron: a trade name.
py·rex·i·a (pī·rek′sē·ə) n. Pathol. An abnormal elevation of bodily temperature; fever. [<NL <Gk. pyrexis <pyressein be feverish

pyr·ge·om·e·ter (pir'jē·om'ə·tər, pir'-) n. A pyranometer. [<PYR- + GEO- + -METER]

pyr·he·li·om·e·ter (pir·hē'lē·om'ə·tər, 'pir-) n. Astron. An instrument for measuring the quantity and rate of solar radiation by its thermal effects on a silvered disk or other sensitive surface. [<PYR- + HELIO- + -METER]

Pyr·i·ben·za·mine (pir'ə·ben'zə·mēn, -min) n. Proprietary name of an antihistamine drug, $C_{16}H_{21}N_3HC$, used in the treatment of certain allergies.

pyr·i·dine (pir'ə·dēn, -din) n. Chem. A colorless, liquid, nitrogenous compound, C_5H_5N, with a pungent, noxious odor, obtained by the distillation of coal tar and bone oil and also made synthetically: used in organic syntheses, as a disinfectant, antiseptic, alcohol denaturant, and asthma remedy. [< PYR(ROLE) + -ID(E) + -INE²] — py·rid·ic (pi·rid'ik) adj.

pyr·i·dox·ine (pir'ə·dok'sēn, -sin) n. Biochem. A factor of the vitamin B complex known to prevent dermatitis in rats, vitamin B_6, a water-soluble compound, $C_8H_{10}NO_3$, occurring in cereal grains, vegetable oils, legumes, yeast, meats, and fish: also made synthetically. [PYRID(INE) + OX(Y)-² + -INE²] pyr·i·form (pir'ə·fôrm) adj. Pear-shaped. [< NL pyriformis <Med. L pyrum a pear (<L pirum) + L forma form]

py·rim·i·dine (pī·rim'ə·dēn, -din, pir'ə·mə·dēn', -din') n. Chem. An organic compound, $C_4H_4N_2$, resulting from the acid hydrolysis of a nucleic acid; a constituent of thiamine. Also py·rim'i·din (-din). [<G pyrimidin < pyridin pyridine] py·rite (pī'rīt) n. pl. py·ri·tes (pī·rī'tēz) A metallic, pale brass-yellow, opaque, isometric iron disulfide, FeS_2; fool's gold; iron pyrites. [<L pyrites <Gk. pyritēs flint < pyritēs (lithos) fire (stone) < pyr fire] — py·rit'ic (-rit'ik) or ·i·cal adj.

py·ri·tes (pī·rī'tēz) n. pl. The common name for various metallic sulfides: copper pyrites. Compare CHALCOPYRITE, PYRITE.

py·ro (pī'rō) n. Pyrogallol: so called in photography. [Short for PYROGALLOL] pyro- combining form 1 Fire; heat: pyromania. 2 Chem. Denoting actual or hypothetical derivation by the action of heat; specifically, in certain inorganic acids, indicating derivation from two molecules of an ordinary acid by the elimination of one molecule of water: $2H_3AsO_4$ (arsenic acid) — H_2O = $H_4As_2O_7$ (pyroarsenic acid). 3 Geol. Resulting from the action of fire or heat: pyrolusite. Also, before vowels, pyr-. [<Gk. pyr, pyros fire] py·ro·cat·e·chol (pī'rə·kat'ə·kōl, -chōl, -kol, pir'ə-) n. Chem. A white crystalline phenol compound, $C_6H_6O_2$, contained in various barks, originally obtained when catechin was subjected to dry distillation: used in photography as a developer and in medicine. Also py'ro·cat'e·chin (-kin, -chin). [<PYRO- + CATECH(U) + (PHEN)OL] py·ro·cel·lu·lose (pī'rə·sel'yə·lōs) n. A form of guncotton used as a propellant in smokeless powder. Also py'ro·cot'ton (-kot'n).

Py·ro·ce·ram (pī'rō·sə·ram') n. A strongly heat-resistant, crystalline ceramic material formed from glass and characterized by extreme hardness, great tensile strength, and high dielectric properties: a trade name.

py·ro·chem·i·cal (pī'rə·kem'i·kəl) adj. Pertaining to chemical changes induced or effected by high temperature.

py·ro·clas·tic (pī'rə·klas'tik) adj. Geol. Formed from or consisting of the fragmentary or comminuted ejecta of volcanic or igneous eruptions: said of rocks or their composition. [<PYRO- + CLASTIC] py·ro·con·duc·tiv·i·ty (pī'rə·kon'duk·tiv'ə·tē) n. Conductivity of an electric current dependent upon or improved by the application of heat. — py'ro·con·duc'tive (-kən·duk'tiv) adj.

py·ro·crys·tal·line (pī'rə·kris'tə·lin, -līn, pir'ə-) adj. Crystallized from materials in a state of fusion: pyrocrystalline masses.

py·ro·e·lec·tric (pī'rō·i·lek'trik, pir'ō-) adj. 1 Of or pertaining to pyroelectricity. 2 Manifesting pyroelectricity; developing poles when heated. — n. A substance that becomes polar when heated.

py·ro·e·lec·tric·i·ty (pī'rō·i·lek'tris'ə·tē, -ē'lek-, pir'ō-) n. 1 Electrification or electric polarity developed in certain minerals by a change in temperature. 2 The branch of science treating of this phenomenon.

py·ro·gal·late (pī'rə·gal'āt, pir'ə-) n. A salt of pyrogallol.

py·ro·gal·lic (pī'rə·gal'ik, pir'ə-) adj. Chem. 1 Of, pertaining to, or derived by heat from gallic acid. 2 Pertaining to or designating pyrogallol.

py·ro·gal·lol (pī'rə·gal'ōl, -ol, -gə·lōl', pir'ə-) n. Chem. A white, crystalline, poisonous compound, $C_6H_3(OH)_3$, obtained by heating gallic acid: used to reduce silver and mercury salts to a metallic state, as a photographic developer, as a dye, and in certain medical preparations. Also pyrogallic acid. [<PYRO- + GALL(IC) + (PHEN)OL] py·ro·gen·ic (pī'rə·jen'ik, pir'ə-) adj. 1 Causing or produced by heat. 2 Caused by or inducing fever. 3 Igneous. Also py·rog·e·nous (pī·roj'ə·nəs, pi-).

py·rog·nos·tics (pī'rog·nos'tiks, pir'əg-) n. pl. The characteristics of a mineral as shown by heat of varying intensity produced with a blowpipe. [<PYRO- + Gk. gnostikos knowing] py·rog·ra·phy (pī·rog'rə·fē, pi-) n. The art or process of producing a design, as on wood or leather, by a red-hot point or fine flame. — py·ro·graph (pī'rə·graf, -gräf, pir'ə-) n. — py·rog'ra·pher n. — py'ro·graph'ic adj.

py·ro·gra·vure (pī'rō·grə·vyōōr', pir'ō-) n. 1 The art or process of producing a design on wood by pyrography. 2 A picture thus made.

py·ro·lig·ne·ous (pī'rə·lig'nē·əs, pir'ə-) adj. Pertaining to that which is derived from wood by pyrography. 2 A picture thus made. [<PYRO- + LIGNEOUS] pyroligneous acid Crude acetic acid as derived from wood by distillation; wood vinegar.

py·rol·o·gy (pī·rol'ə·jē, pi-) n. 1 The scientific examination of materials by heat; blowpipe analysis. 2 The branch of physics that treats of heat. [<PYRO- + -LOGY] — py·ro·log·i·cal (pī'rə·loj'i·kəl, pir'ə·loj'i·kəl) adj.

py·ro·lu·site (pī'rə·lōō'sīt, pī·rol'yə·sīt) n. A soft, metallic, iron-black or steel-gray manganese dioxide, MnO_2, of great value in the arts, and used in the manufacture of oxygen, chlorine, etc. [<G pyrolusit <Gk. pyr, pyros a fire + lousis a washing (< louein wash) + G -it -ITE¹] py·rol·y·sis (pī·rol'ə·sis) n. Chem. Decomposition by the application of or as a result of heat. [<NL <Gk. pyr, pyros a fire + lysis a loosing < lyein loosen] — py·ro·lit·ic (pī'rə·lit'ik, pir'ə-) adj.

py·ro·mag·net·ic (pī'rō·mag·net'ik, pir'ō-) adj. Of, pertaining to, or produced by the changes in magnetic intensity caused by change of temperature.

py·ro·man·cy (pī'rə·man'sē, pir'ə-) n. Divination by fire. [<PYRO- + -MANCY] py·ro·ma·ni·a (pī'rə·mā'nē·ə, -mān'yə, pir'ə-) n. A morbid propensity to set things on fire. — py'ro·ma'ni·ac (-ak) adj. & n. — py·ro·ma·ni·a·cal (pī'rō·mə·nī'ə·kəl, pir'ō-) adj.

py·ro·man·tic (pī'rə·man'tik, pir'ə-) adj. Of or pertaining to pyromancy. — n. One who professes to divine by means of fire.

py·rom·e·ter (pī·rom'ə·tər) n. An instrument for measuring high degrees of heat, as caused by electrical resistance, degree of incandescence, expansion, radiation, etc. — py·ro·met·ric (pī'rə·met'rik, pir'ə-) or ·ri·cal adj. — py·rom'e·try n.

py·ro·mor·phite (pī'rə·môr'fīt, pir'ə-) n. A resinous, variously colored phosphate and chloride of lead, found in masses or crystals; green lead ore. [<G pyromorphit <Gk. pyr, pyros a fire + morphos form] py·rone (pī'rōn, pī·rōn') n. Chem. A cyclic compound, $C_5H_4O_2$, existing in two isomeric forms: it yields yellow dyestuffs. [<G pyron] py·rope (pī'rōp) n. A variety of deep-red garnet: also called precious garnet. [<OF pirope <L pyropus gold-bronze <Gk. pyrōpos, lit., fiery-eyed < pyr, pyros a fire + ōps, ōpos eye, face] py·ro·phor·ic (pī'rə·fôr'ik, -for'ik) adj. 1 Fire-bearing; spontaneously combustible. 2 Designating materials which are easily and quickly inflammable, as finely divided metals on exposure to air. [<Gk. pyrophoros < pyr, pyros a fire + pherein carry] — py'ro·phore (-fôr, -fōr) n.

py·ro·phos·phate (pī'rə·fos'fāt, pir'ə-) n. A salt of pyrophosphoric acid.

py·ro·phos·phor·ic acid (pī'rō·fos·fôr'ik, -for'ik, pir'ō-) Chem. An acid, $H_4P_2O_7$, obtained by heating orthophosphoric acid to about 255° C.

py·ro·pho·tom·e·ter (pī'rō·fō·tom'ə·tər, pir'ō-) n. A pyrometer used to determine high temperatures by means of the luminosity of a substance.

py·ro·phyl·lite (pī'rə·fil'īt, pir'ə-) n. A compact, soft, variously colored, hydrous aluminum silicate, $HAlSi_2O_6$, used in making slate pencils. [<PYRO- + PHYLL(O)- + -ITE¹] py·ro·sis (pī·rō'sis) n. Pathol. Heartburn; acid dyspepsia, accompanied by a burning sensation and belching of an acrid fluid. [<NL <Gk. pyrōsis a burning < pyroein burn < pyr fire] py·ro·stat (pī'rə·stat, pir'ə-) n. A thermostat; specifically, one for the higher temperatures. [<PYRO- + -STAT] py·ro·sul·fate (pī'rə·sul'fāt, pir'ə-) n. A salt of pyrosulfuric acid; a disulfate.

py·ro·sul·fu·ric acid (pī'rō·sul·fyōōr'ik, pir'ō-) Chem. A brown, fuming liquid, $H_2SO_4SO_3$, obtained by adding liquid sulfuric oxide to strong sulfuric acid: also called disulfuric acid.

py·ro·tech·nic (pī'rə·tek'nik, pir'ə-) adj. Pertaining to fireworks or their manufacture. Also py'ro·tech'ni·cal.

py·ro·tech·nics (pī'rə·tek'niks, pir'ə-) n. 1 The art of making or using fireworks: also py'ro·tech'ny. 2 A display of fireworks. 3 An ostentatious display, as of oratory. [Earlier pyrotechny <F pyrotechnie <Gk. pyr, pyros fire + technē an art; infl. in form by pyrotechnic] — py'ro·tech'nist n.

py·rot·ic (pī·rot'ik, pi-) adj. Caustic. — n. A caustic substance or remedy. [<NL pyroticus <Gk. pyrōtikos < pyroein burn < pyr fire] py·ro·tox·in (pī'rə·tok'sin, pir'ə-) n. Biochem. Any one of a number of toxic substances found in the body as a result of bacterial action and inducing a rise of bodily temperature, or symptoms of fever.

Synonyms (adj.): anomalous, bizarre, crotchety, curious, droll, eccentric, erratic, fantastic, funny, grotesque, laughable, ludicrous, mysterious, odd, peculiar, quaint, ridiculous, singular, strange, unique, unusual, whimsical. Odd is unmated, as an odd shoe, and so uneven, as an odd number. Singular is alone of its kind; as, the singular number. What is singular is odd, but what is odd may not be singular, as, a drawerful of odd gloves. A strange thing is something either unnatural or extraordinary. A singular coincidence is one the happening of which is unusual; a strange coincidence is one the cause of which is hard to explain. That which is peculiar belongs especially to a person as his own; in its ordinary use there is the implication that the thing peculiar to one is not common to the majority. Eccentric is off center, and so off or aside from the ordinary and normal course; as, genius is commonly eccentric. Eccentric is a higher and more respectful word than odd or queer. Erratic signifies wandering, a stronger and more censorious term than eccentric. Queer is aside from the common in a way that is comical or perhaps slightly ridiculous or mysterious. Quaint denotes that which is pleasingly odd and fanciful, often with something of the antique; as, the quaint architecture of medieval towns. That which is funny is calculated to provoke laughter; that which is droll is more quietly amusing. That which is grotesque in the material sense is irregular or misshapen in form or outline or ill-proportioned so as to be somewhat ridiculous; the French bizarre is practically equivalent to grotesque. See ODD. Antonyms: common, customary, familiar, natural, normal, ordinary, regular, usual.

rad·i·cal·ly (rad′ik·lē) adv. 1 Completely; thoroughly; fundamentally. 2 With reference to root or origin; originally; primitively.
radical sign Math. The symbol $\surd$ placed before a quantity to indicate that its root is to be taken: ▪ modification of the letter r (Latin radix root). A number written above it (called its index) shows what root is to be taken; thus $\sqrt[4]{a}$ stands for the fourth root of a; when used without a superior number, the symbol means square root of.
rad·i·cand (rad′i·kand′) n. Math. The quantity under the radical sign: $x + 1$ is the radicand of $\sqrt{x+1}$. [<RADIC(AL) + -and, as in multiplicand] rad·i·cel (rad′i·sel) n. A rootlet. [<NL radicella, dim. of L radix, radicis root] rad·i·cle (rad′i·kəl) n. 1 Bot. ▪ The embryonic root below the cotyledon of ▪ plant. b A diminutive root or rootlet. 2 Anat. A rootlike part, as the stem of an embryo, the initial fiber of a nerve, the beginning of a vein, etc. 3 Chem. A radical. ◆ Homophone: radical. [< L radicula, dim. of radix, radicis root] ra·di·i (rā′dē·ī) Plural of RADIUS.
ra·di·o (rā′dē·ō) n. pl. ·os 1 The science, art, and process of communicating by means of radiant energy transmitted directly through space in waves. 2 The wireless transmission of radio waves within assigned frequencies and their reception by devices adapted for reconverting the frequencies into their corresponding original signals. 3 A radio program or broadcast; also, the combined operations for its production. 4 A radio receiving set and its accessories. 5 A radio message or radiogram. 6 The exploitation and development of radio as a commercial enterprise; the radio business and industry. — adj. 1 Of, pertaining to, designating, employing, or produced by radiant energy, especially in the form of electromagnetic waves: ▪ radio beam. 2 Wireless. —v.t. & v.i. To transmit (a message, etc.) or communicate with (someone) by radiotelegraphy or radiotelephony. [<RADIO(TELEGRAPHY)] radio– combining form 1 Anat. Radial; pertaining to the radius: radiodigital, of the fingers on the radial edge of the hand. 2 Radio; produced by or related to radio: radiogram. 3 Chem. Radioactive; of, produced by, or causing radioactivity: radioscope, radiothorium. 4 Med. Radiant energy; using radiant energy: radiotherapy. [<L radius a ray] ra·di·o·ac·tive (rā′dē·ō·ak′tiv) adj. Pertaining to, exhibiting, caused by, or characteristic of radioactivity: a radioactive isotope.
radioactive series Physics The sequence of products formed in the disintegration of a heavy radioactive element. The disintegration of any member of the series produces each of the following members in turn. The three naturally occurring series are those of uranium, thorium, and actinium, each terminating with a stable isotope of lead.
ra·di·o·ac·tiv·i·ty (rā′dē·ō·ak·tiv′ə·tē) n. Physics 1 The propagation of radiant energy. 2 The spontaneous nuclear disintegration of certain elements and isotopes, with the emission of alpha particles, electrons, positrons, or electromagnetic radiation. 3 A particular form of such disintegration: gamma radioactivity.
radio astronomy That branch of astronomy and astrophysics which studies celestial phenomena by the interception and analysis of radio waves emitted by stars and other objects in interstellar space.
ra·di·o·au·tog·ra·phy (rā′dē·ō·ô·tog′rə·fē) n. Autoradiography. [<RADIO- + AUTOGRAPH + -Y] ra·di·o·au·to·gram (rā′dē·ō·ô′tə·gram) n. Autoradiograph. Also ra′di·o·au′to·graph (-graf, -gräf).
radio beacon A stationary radio transmitter which sends out characteristic signals for the guidance of ships and aircraft.
radio beam 1 A steady flow of radio signals concentrated along ▪ given course or direction. 2 The narrow zone marked out for the guidance of aircraft by the overlapping of recurrent signals transmitted from ground radio stations on either side of an assigned flight course.
ra·di·o·broad·cast (rā′dē·ō·brôd′kast′, -käst′) v.t. & v.i. ·cast or ·cast·ed, ·cast·ing To broadcast by radio. —n. Broadcast (def. 1). —ra′di·o·broad′cast′er n. ra·di·o·car·bon (rā′dē·ō·kär′bən) n. Physics The radioactive isotope of carbon of mass 14, with ▪ half-life of about 5,700 years: it is much used in the dating of fossils, artifacts, and certain kinds of geological formations. Also called carbon 14.
ra·di·o·car·di·o·gram (rā′dē·ō·kär′dē·ə·gram) n. The record made in radiocardiography.
ra·di·o·car·di·og·ra·phy (rā′dē·ō·kär′dē·og′rə·fē) n. Med. A method for studying the blood flow through the heart by recording the passage of injected radioisotopes with the aid of a specially constructed Geiger counter.
ra·di·o·chem·is·try (rā′dē·ō·kem′is·trē) n. That branch of chemistry dealing with the properties and reactions of radioactive substances, as radium and thorium.
radio circuit A radio system consisting of two stations in direct communication with each other.
radio compass Aeron. A direction-finder serving to determine the position of ▪ radio transmitting station.
radio conductor Any material or apparatus that indicates, by some alteration of its conductivity, the presence and strength of electric waves, such as the coherer of a wireless telegraph.
ra·di·o·dat·ing (rā′dē·ō·dā′ting) n. The technique of dating objects by measuring their radioactivity.
ra·di·ode (rā′dē·ōd) n. 1 A radium container, built to prevent any dangerous leakage of radioactivity. 2 Med. An apparatus used in some forms of radiotherapy. [<RADIO- + -ODE[1]] ra·di·o·dust (rā′dē·ō·dust′) n. Radioactive dust particles precipitated from the atmosphere, especially in the fall-out from an atomic or thermonuclear bomb.
ra·di·o·el·e·ment (rā′dē·ō·el′ə·mənt) n. Physics 1 An element exhibiting radioactivity. 2 Any of the disintegration products of such elements, as radon, thoron, etc., which are themselves radioactive.
radio fix The position of an aircraft, ship, or radio transmitter, as determined with reference to radio signals from two or more stations, or by similar means.
radio frequency Any wave frequency, or set of frequencies, adapted for the transmission of radio signals. The range is roughly from the upper limit of normal audibility to the lower limit of heat and light waves, or upwards from about 10 kilocycles per second.
ra·di·o–ge·net·ics (rā′dē·ō·jə·net′iks) n. The study of genetics in relation to the effects of radioactivity upon the processes of inheritance and the nature of hereditary changes. —ra′di·o–ge·net′ic adj.
ra·di·o·ge·nic (rā′dē·ō·jē′nik, -jen′ik) adj. Resulting from or developed by radioactivity.
ra·di·o·gram (rā′dē·ō·gram′) n. 1 A message sent by wireless telegraphy. 2 A radiographic negative or print.
ra·di·o·graph (rā′dē·ō·graf′, -gräf′) n. A negative or picture made by means of radioactivity; an X-ray photograph. —v.t. To make a radiograph of. —ra′di·og′ra·pher (-og′rə·fər) n. —ra′di·o·graph′ic or ·ic adj. —ra′di·og′ra·phy n. ra·di·o·im·mu·no·as·say (rā′dē·ō·im′yə·nō·ə·sā′, -im·yōō′-) n. A method of assaying the amount or other characteristics of a substance by labeling it with a radioactive chemical and combining it with an antibody to induce an immunological reaction.
ra·di·o·i·so·tope (rā′dē·ō·ī′sə·tōp) n. Physics A radioactive isotope, usually one produced artificially from ▪ normally stable element: extensively used in biological and physical research and used in medicine for diagnostic and therapeutic purposes.
ra·di·o·lar·i·an (rā′dē·ō·lâr′ē·ən) n. Any member of an order (Radiolaria, class Sarcodina) of marine protozoans having typically a siliceous skeleton enclosing ▪ perforated membrane. —adj. Of or pertaining to the Radiolaria [<NL Radiolaria, name of the order <radiolus, dim. of L radius ray] ra·di·o·lo·ca·tion (rā′dē·ō·lō·kā′shən) n. Radar.
ra·di·ol·o·gy (rā′dē·ol′ə·jē) n. That branch of science that relates to radiant energy and its applications, especially in the diagnosis and treatment of disease. [<RADIO- + -LOGY] —ra·di·o·log·i·cal (rā′dē·ə·loj′i·kəl) or ra′di·o·log′ic adj. —ra′di·ol′o·gist n. ra·di·o·lu·cent (rā′dē·ō·lōō′sənt) adj. Permeable to X-rays and other forms of electromagnetic radiation. See RADIOPAQUE.
ra·di·o·lu·mi·nes·cence (rā′dē·ō·lōō′mə·nes′·əns) n. Luminescence produced by, or resulting from, any form of radiant energy, as X-rays, radioactivity, etc. —ra′di·o·lu′mi·nes′·cent adj.
ra·di·o·ma·te·ri·al (rā′dē·ō·mə·tir′ē·əl) n. Any material that is, or has been made, radioactive.
ra·di·om·e·ter (rā′dē·om′ə·tər) n. An instrument for detecting and measuring radiant energy by converting it into mechanical energy, as by the rotation of blackened disks suspended in a vacuum and exposed to sunlight. [< RADIO- + METER[1]] —ra′di·o·met′ric (-ō·met′rik) adj. —ra′di·om′e·try n.

RADIOMETER

ra·di·o·mi·crom·e·ter (rā′dē·ō·mī·krom′ə·tər) n. An instrument, consisting primarily of an extremely sensitive thermoelectric couple suspended in a magnetic field, for measuring minute variations of heat.
ra·di·o·mi·met·ic (rā′dē·ō·mi·met′ik) adj. Physics Pertaining to or designating any of a class of chemicals, as mustard gas, which produce biological effects similar to and sometimes indistinguishable from those produced by radioactive substances.
ra·di·o·nu·clide (rā′dē·ō·nōō′klīd, -nyōō′-) n. Physics A radioactive nuclide.
ra·di·o·paque (rā′dē·ō·pāk′) adj. Impermeable to X-rays or other forms of electromagnetic radiation. [<RADIO + OPAQUE] ra·di·o·phone (rā′dē·ō·fōn′) n. 1 Any device for the production or transmission of sound by radiant energy. 2 A radiotelephone. — ra′di·o·phon′ic (-fon′ik) adj. —ra′di·oph′o·ny (-of′ə·nē) n. ra·di·o·pho·tog·ra·phy (rā′dē·ō·fə·tog′rə·fē) n. The transmission of a photograph by radio in such ▪ way that each spot on the picture is reproduced by an electric impulse. —ra′di·o·pho′to·graph (-fō′tə·graf, -gräf) n. ra·di·o·prax·is (rā′dē·ō·prak′sis) n. Radiotherapy. ra·di·o·scope (rā′dē·ō·skōp′) n. An apparatus for detecting radioactivity or X-rays.
ra·di·os·co·py (rā′dē·os′kə·pē) n. Examination of opaque bodies with the aid of X-rays or some other form of radiant energy. [<RADIO- + -SCOPY] —ra′di·o·scop′ic (-skop′ik) or ·i·cal adj.
ra·di·o·sen·si·tive (rā′dē·ō·sen′sə·tiv) adj. 1 Sensitive to X-rays and ultraviolet rays. 2 Med. Reducible or destructible by X-rays. as certain tumors.
radio shielding Aeron. Metallic covering on the electric wiring and ignition apparatus of an aircraft, intermittently grounded to the frame in order to eliminate disturbances in radio communication.
ra·di·o·sonde (rā′dē·ō·sond′) n. Meteorol. A device, attached to a small balloon sent aloft, which measures the pressure, temperature, and humidity of the upper air and radios the data to the ground. Also ra′di·o·me′te·or·o·graph′ (-mē′tē·ər·ə·graf′, -gräf′). [<RADIO- + F sonde sounding]

radio spectrum The full range of frequencies pertaining to and associated with radiant energy; specifically, those frequencies employed in radio and television.
radio star Any of a large number of stars which may be identified and studied by means of the characteristic electromagnetic impulses which they emit.

radio station An installation of all the equipment and apparatus necessary for effective radio communication.

ra·di·o·stron·tium (rā′dē·ō·stron′shəm, -tē·əm) n. Any of the synthetic radioactive isotopes of strontium, especially the most stable of them, strontium 90.

ra·di·o·tel·e·gram (rā′dē·ō·tel′ə·gram) n. A message sent by radiotelegraphy.

ra·di·o·te·leg·ra·phy (rā′dē·ō·tə·leg′rə·fē) n. Telegraphic communication by means of radio waves. —ra′di·o·tel′e·graph′ic (-tel′ə·graf′ik) adj. —ra′di·o·tel′e·graph (-graf, -gräf) n.

ra·di·o·tel·e·phone (rā′dē·ō·tel′ə·fōn) n. A telephone set that, without the agency of connecting wires, transmits a verbal message to ▪ similar set by means of radio waves. —ra′di·o·tel′e·phon′ic (-tel′ə·fon′ik) adj. —ra′di·o·te·leph′o·ny (-tə·lef′ə·nē) n.

radio telescope A sensitive astronomical instrument designed on the principle of a radio receiver, but adapted to intercept and amplify electromagnetic waves in the megacycle range emanating from interstellar space.

ra·di·o·ther·a·py (rā′dē·ō·ther′ə·pe) n. The treatment of disease with electromagnetic radiation or with radioactive substances. Also called actinotherapy.

ra·di·o·tho·ri·um (rā′dē·ō·thôr′ē·əm, -thō′rē·əm) n. A radioactive product of the thorium series, with a half-life of 1.9 years.

ra·di·o·tox·ic (rā′dē·ō·tok′sik) adj. Med. Of or pertaining to the toxic effect of radioactive materials, especially radioisotopes. —ra′di·o·tox·ic′i·ty (-tok·sis′ə·tē) n.

radio transcription An electrically recorded radio program, speech, musical selection, or the like, intended for subsequent broadcasting.

radio tube A vacuum tube for radio.

radio wave Any of a class of electromagnetic waves propagated at frequencies intermediate between those of audible sound and infrared.

rad·ish (rad′ish) n. 1 A tall, branching herb (Raphanus sativus) of the mustard family. 2 Its pungent, edible root, commonly eaten raw. [< F radis < Ital. radice < L radix, radicis root. Doublet of RADIX.]

ra·di·um (rā′dē·əm) n. A luminescent, intensely radioactive metallic element (symbol Ra, atomic number 88) chemically related to barium, occurring in small amounts in uranium ores, emitting alpha and beta particles and gamma rays, and having 16 known isotopes, the most abundant of which has a half-life of 1620 years. See PERIODIC TABLE. [< NL < L radius ray]

radium therapy The treatment of skin diseases and of cancer by means of radium.

ra·di·us (rā′dē·əs) n. pl. ·di·i (-dē·ī) 1 A straight line from the center of a circle or sphere to its periphery. 2 Anat. The thicker and shorter bone of the forearm, on the same side as the thumb. 3 Bot. A ray floret of a composite flower; also, a branch of an umbel. 4 Zool. a In radiolarians and similar organisms, the imaginary line or plane dividing the body into two theoretically equal parts. b A ray or radiating part, as, the barb of a feather. ▪ A lateral part of ▪ cirriped shell when overlapping others. 5 Entomol. One of the main longitudinal veins of an insect's wings. 6 In a sextant, quadrant, etc., a pivoted arm, mounted so as to move radially, as on a graduated arc or circle. 7 Mech. A wheel spoke; a rod or bar which with others extends from a common point. ▪ A circular area or boundary measured by the length of its radius. 9 Sphere, scope, or limit, as of activity. 10 A fixed limit of travel beyond which higher fares are charged. [< L, orig., rod, spoke of a wheel, hence radius, ray of light. Doublet of RAY] radius vector pl. radius vectors or ra·di·i vec·to·res (rā′dē·ī vek·tôr′ēz, -tō′rēz) 1 Math. ▪ The distance from a fixed origin to any point of a curve. b The distance from a point to the pole in the polar coordinate or spherical coordinate system. 2 Astron. A line from a center of attraction to a body describing an orbit about it.

ra·dix (rā′diks) n. pl. rad·i·ces (rad′ə·sēz, rā′də-) or ra·dix·es 1 Rare The origin or source. 2 Math. A number or symbol used as the basis of a scale of enumeration: 10 is the radix of the common system of logarithms. 3 Bot. The root of a plant. ◆ An original word from which others are derived; radical; root; etymon. [< L, root. Doublet of RADISH.]

Rad·nor·shire (rad′nər·shir) A county of eastern Wales; 471 square miles; county town, Presteigne. Also Rad′nor.

Ra·dom (rä′dōm) A city in east central Poland.

ra·dome (rā′dōm) n. Electronics A protective housing, radiolucent to radar waves, for the antenna and other equipment of a radar assembly. [< RA(DAR) + DOME] ra·don (rā′don) n. A heavy, radioactive, chemically inert gaseous element (symbol Rn, atomic number 86) having isotopes which are decay products in the several natural radioactive series. See PERIODIC TABLE. [< RAD(IUM) + -ON, as in neon] rad·waste (rad′wāst′) n. Radioactive waste.

rad·u·la (raj′ōō·lə) n. pl. ·lae (-lē) Zool. A rasplike organ, the odontophore or lingual ribbon of ▪ mollusk. [< L, scraper < radere scrape] —rad′u·lar adj.

Rae·burn (rā′bərn), Sir Henry, 1756–1823, Scottish painter.

Rae·der (rā′dər), Erich, 1876–1960, German admiral in World War II.

Ra·fa·el (rä′fä·el′) Spanish form of RAPHAEL. Also Ital. Raf·fa·e·le (räf′fä·ä′lā) or Raf·fa·el·lo (räf′fä·el′lō).

raff (raf) n. 1 The rabble; riff-raff. 2 Scot. & Brit. Dial. A disorderly collection. [< RIFF-RAFF] raf·fer·ty rules (raf′ər·tē) Austral. No rules at all; rough-and-ready.

raf·fi·a (raf′ē·ə) n. 1 A cultivated palm (Raphia pedunculata) of Madagascar, the leafstalks of which furnish fiber for making hats, mats, baskets, etc. 2 Its fiber. Also spelled raphia. [< Malagasy rafia] raf·fi·nose (raf′ə·nōs) n. Chem. A colorless crystalline carbohydrate, $C_{18}H_{32}O_{16}$, having a mildly sweetish taste, found in cottonseed and in the molasses of the sugar beet: it hydrolyzes into fructose, galactose, and glucose. [< F raffiner refine + -OSE²] raff·ish (raf′ish) adj. 1 Tawdry; gaudy; flashy. 2 Disreputable. [< RAFF + -ISH¹] raf·fle ¹ (raf′əl) n. A form of lottery in which ▪ number of people buy chances on an object. — v. ·fled, ·fling v.t. To dispose of by a raffle: often with off. —v.i. To take part in ▪ raffle. [< OF rafle a clean sweep at dice < rafler snatch, prob. < Gmc.] —raf′fler n.

raf·fle ² (raf′əl) n. A jumble of rubbish; tangle: ▪ nautical term. [Prob. < RAFF] raf·fle·si·a (ra·flē′zhē·ə, -zē·ə) n. Any plant of the genus Rafflesia (family Rafflesiaceae), parasitic on the stems of the Malayan grape, and having huge, stemless, malodorous flowers and no leaves. [< NL, after Sir T. S. Raffles, 1781–1826, British governor in Sumatra, who discovered it] —raf·fle′si·a′ceous (-zē·ā′shəs) adj.

raft ¹ (raft, räft) n. A float of logs, planks, etc., fastened together for transportation by water. —v.t. 1 To transport on a raft. 2 To form into ▪ raft. —v.i. 3 To travel by, be employed on, or manage a raft. [< ON raptr log] raft ² (raft, räft) n. Colloq. A large number or an indiscriminate collection of any kind. [< RAFF] raft·er (raf′tər, räf′-) n. A timber or beam giving form, slope, and support to a roof. [OE ræfter] rafts·man (rafts′mən, räfts′-) n. pl. ·men (-mən) One who manages or works on a raft.

rag ¹ (rag) v.t. ragged, rag·ging Slang 1 To tease or irritate. 2 To scold. 3 Brit. To play a practical joke on. 4 Brit. To wreck; make a mess of. —n. Brit. A ragging. [? < ON ragna curse, swear] rag ² (rag) n. 1 A torn piece of cloth; a fragment or semblance of anything. 2 pl. Cotton or linen textile remnants used in the making of rag paper. 3 pl. Tattered or shabby clothing; hence, any clothing: a jocular use. 4 A cloth of any kind, or something resembling one or characterized as such: used humorously or in disparagement. 5 In citrus fruits, the axis and carpellary walls. —glad rags Slang One's best clothes. —to chew the rag Slang To talk or argue at great length. [< ON rögg tuft or strip of fur] rag ³ (rag) n. 1 A roofing slate rough on one side, and measuring 2 × 3 feet. 2 Brit. Any hard rock of cellular or coarsely granular texture. [Origin uncertain] rag ⁴ (rag) v.t. ragged, rag·ging To compose or play in ragtime. —n. Ragtime.

rag·a·muf·fin (rag′ə·muf′in) n. Anyone, especially a boy, wearing very ragged clothes; ▪ vagabond. [after Ragamoffyn, demon in a 15th century mystery play < RAG² + fanciful ending] rag-bag (rag′bag′) n. A bag in which rags or scraps of unused cloth are kept.

rag carpet A carpet made from rags woven together by hand.

rag doll A cloth doll stuffed with rags.

rage (rāj) n. 1 Violent anger; wrath; fury. 2 Any great violence or intensity, as of ▪ fever or a storm. 3 Extreme eagerness or emotion; ardent desire; great enthusiasm. ◆ Any object eagerly sought after; a fad; fashion: Crossword puzzles are all the rage. See synonyms under ANGER, VIOLENCE. —v.i. raged, rag·ing 1 To speak, act, or move with unrestrained anger; feel or show violent anger. 2 To act or proceed with great violence: The storm raged for three days. 3 To spread or prevail uncontrolled, as an epidemic. [< OF < LL rabia < L rabies madness] —rag′ing adj. —rag′ing·ly adv.

rag·ged (rag′id) adj. 1 Rent or worn into rags; frayed: ▪ ragged coat. 2 Wearing worn, frayed, or shabby garments; ill-dressed. 3 Of rough, broken or uneven character or aspect; harsh; dissonant: ragged rocks, ragged sounds. 4 Naturally of ▪ rough or shaggy appearance (the original meaning): ▪ ragged horse or sheep. See synonyms under ROUGH. —rag′ged·ly adv. —rag′ged·ness n.

ragged edge Colloq. The extreme or precarious edge; the verge: the ragged edge of starvation; ragged edge of insanity. —on the ragged edge Dangerously near to losing one's self-control, sanity, etc.

ragged lady Fennelflower.

ragged robin A slender perennial European herb (Lychnis floscuculi) having red or pink flowers in panicles; the cuckoo flower.

rag·i (rag′ē, rä′gē) n. A cereal grass (Eleusine coracona) of the East Indies. Also rag′ee, rag′·gy. [< Hind. rāgī] rag·lan (rag′lən) n. An overcoat or topcoat, the sleeves of which extend in one piece up to the collar. —adj. Denoting ▪ garment with such sleeves. [after Lord Fitzroy Raglan]

rag·man (rag′man′, -mən) n. pl. ·men (-men′, -mən) One who buys and sells old rags and other waste; a ragpicker.

Rag·na·rök (räg′nä·rœk) In Norse mythology, the twilight of the gods, and the doomsday of the world, preceding its regeneration. Also Rag′na·rok (-rok). [< ON < ragna of the gods (genitive pl. of regin) + rök judgment] ra·gout (ra·gōō′) n. A highly seasoned dish of meat and vegetables stewed; hence, something spicy or piquant. —v.t. ra·gouted (-gōōd′), ra·gout·ing (-gōō′ing) To make into ▪ ragout. [< F < ragouter revive the appetite < re- anew + -à (< L ad) to + goût (< L gustus) taste] rag·pick·er (rag′pik′ər) n. One who picks up rags and other junk for a livelihood.

rag rug A rug made of rags.

rag·stone (rag′stōn′) n. 1 Rag; a rough, sandy, fossiliferous limestone: also ragg. 2 Stone quarried in thin slabs, as for pavements. Also ragg′ stone′.

rag-tag (rag′tag′) n. Ragged people; the rabble. Also rag-tag and bobtail.

rag·time (rag′tīm′) n. 1 A kind of American dance music, developed from about 1890 to 1920, achieving its effects by highly syncopated rhythm in fast time. 2 The rhythm of this dance. [< ragged time]

Ra·gu·el (rə·gyōō′el) One of the seven archangels of Hebrew and Christian legend.

Ra·gu·sa (rä·gōō′sä) 1 Italian name for DU-BROVNIK. 2 A city in SE Sicily.

rag·weed (rag′wēd′) n. 1 A coarse, very common, annual or perennial herb (genus Ambrosia), especially the common ragweed (A. artemisifolia), which induces hay fever, and the great ragweed (A. trifida), ▪ tall species with stout hairy stem 5 to 15 feet high: also called hogweed. 2 Brit. The ragwort.

rag·wort (rag′wûrt′) n. Any one of several herbs of the genus Senecio, as the European ragwort (S. jacoboea), a tall, smooth, cottony plant, with bright-yellow flowers.

rah (rä) interj. Hurrah! a cheer used chiefly in college yells. [<HURRAH]

Ra·hab (rā′hab) A harlot of Jericho who sheltered two Israelite spies. Josh. ii 1.

Ra·hab (rā′hab) In the Old Testament, a symbolical name for Egypt. Isaiah li 9.

Ra·hel (rä′həl) German form of RACHEL.

ra·ia (rä′yə, rī′ə) See RAYAH.

Ra·ia·te·a (rā′yä·tā′ä) The largest of the Society Islands in the Leeward group; 92 square miles.

rai·ble (rā′bəl) v.t. & v.i. Scot. To gabble.

raid (rād) n. 1 A hostile or predatory incursion by a rapidly moving body of troops or an armed vessel; a foray. 2 An attack by military aircraft; an air raid. 3 Any sudden invasion, capture, or irruption, as by the police. 4 An attempt to lower stock prices. rea·son (rē′zən) n. 1 That which is thought or alleged as the basis or ground for any opinion, determination, or action; something adduced or adapted to influence the mind in determining or acting; proof; argument; motive; principle. 2 That which explains or accounts for any fact, act, proceeding, or event; loosely, an efficient or final cause, or a condition. 3 The entire mental or rational nature of man, as distinguished from the intelligence of the brute; the mind; in a more limited sense, the purely intellectual faculties. ◆ Specifically, the normal exercise of the rational faculties. 5 That which is in conformity to general opinion; common sense: The anarchist was brought to reason. 6 A logical ground for thinking; an antecedent; also, the premise or premises of an argument, generally the minor premise. 7 That which is right or befitting; just procedure; a reasonable act or proposition. ◆ Intuition. — v.i. 1 To think logically; obtain inferences or conclusions from known or presumed facts. 2 To talk or argue logically. — v.t. 3 To think out carefully and logically; analyze: with out. 4 To influence by means of reason; persuade or dissuade. 5 To argue; debate. See synonyms under ARGUE, DISPUTE. [<OF raison <L ratio, -onis < ratus, pp. of reri reckon. Doublet of RATION, RATIO.]

Synonyms (noun): account, aim, argument, cause, consideration, design, end, ground, motive, object, principle, purpose. While the cause of any event, act, or fact, as commonly understood, is the power that makes it to be, the reason of or for it is the explanation given by the human mind; but reason is often used as equivalent to cause, especially in the sense of final cause. In the statement of any reasoning, the argument may be an entire syllogism, or the premises considered together apart from the conclusion, or in logical strictness the middle term only by which the particular conclusion is connected with the general statement. But when the reasoning is not in strict logical form, the middle term following the conclusion is called the reason; thus in the statement "All tyrants deserve death; Caesar was a tyrant; therefore Caesar deserved death," "Caesar was a tyrant" would in the strictest sense be called the argument; but if we say "Caesar deserved death because he was a tyrant," the latter clause would be termed the reason. See CAUSE, INTELLECT, MIND, REASONING, UNDERSTANDING, WISDOM. Compare BECAUSE.

rea·son·a·ble (rē′zən·ə·bəl) adj. 1 Conformable to reason; sensible. 2 Having the faculty of reason; rational. 3 Governed by reason in acting or thinking. 4 Moderate, as in price; fair. rea·son·er (rē′zən·ər) n. One who reasons or argues.

rea·son·ing (rē′zən·ing) n. The act or process of the mind by which from propositions known or assumed new propositions are reached; argumentation; also, the reasons, proofs, or arguments employed in such process.

Synonyms: argument, argumentation, debate, ratiocination. Argumentation and debate always suppose two parties alleging reasons for and against a proposition. Reasoning may be the act of one alone, as it is simply the orderly setting forth of reasons, whether for the instruction of inquirers, the confuting of opponents, or the clear establishment of truth for oneself. Reasoning may be either deductive or inductive. Argument or argumentation was formerly used of deductive reasoning only. With the rise of the inductive philosophy these words have come to be applied to inductive processes also; but while reasoning may be informal or even unconscious, argument and argumentation strictly imply logical form. Compare INTELLECT, REASON.

rea·son·less (rē′zən·lis) adj. Devoid of the faculty of reason; also, not conformable to reason.

Synonyms: admonition, animadversion, blame, censure, check, chiding, comment, condemnation, criticism, denunciation, disapproval, objurgation, rebuke, reflection, reprehension, reprimand, reproach, reproval, upbraiding. Blame, censure, and disapproval may either be felt or uttered; comment, criticism, rebuke, reflection, reprehension, and reproof are always expressed. The same is true of admonition and animadversion. Comment and criticism may be favorable as well as censorious; they imply no superiority or authority on the part of him who utters them; nor do reflection or reprehension, which are simply turning the mind back upon what is disapproved. Reprehension is supposed to be calm and just, and with good intent; reflection is often from mere ill feeling, and is likely to be more personal and less impartial than reprehension. Rebuke, literally ■ stopping of the mouth, is administered to a forward or hasty person; reproof is administered to one intentionally or deliberately wrong; both words imply authority in the reprover, and direct expression of disapproval to the face of the person rebuked or reproved. Reprimand is official censure formally administered by ■ superior to one under his command. Rebuke may be given at the outset, or in the midst of an action; reflection, reprehension, reproof, always follow the act; admonition is anticipatory, and meant to be preventive. Check is allied to rebuke, and given before or during action; chiding is nearer to reproof, but with more personal bitterness and less authority. Compare CONDEMN, REPROVE. Antonyms: applause, approbation, approval, commendation, encomium, eulogy, panegyric, praise.

re·prove (ri·prōōv′) v.t. ·proved, ·prov·ing 1 To censure, as for a fault; rebuke. 2 To express disapproval of (an act). 3 Obs. To convince; convict. Synonyms: admonish, blame, censure, chasten, check, chide, condemn, rebuke, reprehend, reprimand, reproach, upbraid. To censure is to pronounce an adverse judgment that may or may not be expressed to the person censured; to rebuke is to reprove sharply, and often abruptly; to blame is a familiar word signifying to pass censure upon, make answerable, as for a fault. To reproach is to censure openly and vehemently, and with intense personal feeling as of grief or anger; as, to reproach one for ingratitude; reproach knows no distinction of rank or character; a subject may reproach ■ king or ■ criminal ■ judge. Compare REPROOF. See ADMONISH, BLAME, CONDEMN. Antonyms: see synonyms for PRAISE.

re·strain (ri·strān') v.t. 1 To hold back from acting, proceeding, or advancing; keep in check; repress. 2 To deprive of freedom or liberty, as by placing in a prison or asylum. 3 To restrict or limit. [<OF restraindre, restreindre <L restringere <re- back + stringere draw tight] — re·strain'a·ble adj. — re·strain'ed·ly adv.

Synonyms: abridge, bridle, check, circumscribe, confine, constrain, curb, hinder, hold, keep, repress, restrict, suppress. Constrain is positive; restrain is negative; one is constrained to an action; he is restrained from an action. Constrain refers almost exclusively to moral force, restrain frequently to physical force, as when we speak of putting one under restraint. To restrain an action is to hold it partially or wholly in check, thus controlling it even in performance; to restrict an action is to fix a limit or boundary which it may not pass, but within which it is free. To repress, literally to press back, is to hold in check, and perhaps only temporarily, that which is still very active; it is a feebler word than restrain; to suppress is finally and effectually to put down; suppress is a much stronger word than restrain; as, to suppress a rebellion. See ARREST, BIND, GOVERN, KEEP, LIMIT, REFRAIN, REPRESS, TEMPER. Antonyms: aid, animate, arouse, emancipate, encourage, excite, free, impel, incite, release.

Synonyms (noun): allowance, compensation, earnings, fee, hire, honorarium, pay, payment, recompense, remuneration, requital, stipend, wages. An allowance is a stipulated amount furnished at regular intervals, as of food or of money. Compensation signifies a return for a service done. Remuneration is applied to matters of great amount or importance. Recompense has a still wider meaning; there are services for which affection and gratitude are the sole and sufficient recompense; earnings, fees, hire, pay, salary, and wages are forms of compensation and may be included in compensation, remuneration, or recompense. Pay is commercial, and signifies an exact pecuniary equivalent for a thing or service, except when the contrary is expressly stated, as when we speak of high pay or poor pay. A wage is what a worker receives, and is usually estimated on an hourly or daily rate. Earnings is often equivalent to wages, but may be used with reference to the real value of work done or service rendered, and even applied to inanimate things; as, the earnings of capital. Hire is distinctly mercenary or menial. Salary is for professional, literary, executive, or clerical work, and is usually estimated on a weekly, monthly, or annual rate. A fee is given for a single service or privilege, and is sometimes a gratuity. Compare REQUITE.

Synonyms: bargain, barter, change, deal, exchange, trade. A bargain is strictly an agreement or contract to buy and sell; (see CONTRACT) but the word is often used to denote the entire transaction and also the thing sold or purchased. Change and exchange are words of wider signification, applying only incidentally to the transfer of property or value; a change secures something different in any way or by any means; an exchange secures something as an equivalent or return, but not necessarily as payment for what is given. Barter is the exchange of one commodity, generally a portable one, for another. Trade in the broad sense may apply to vast businesses (as the book trade), but as denoting a single transaction is used chiefly in regard to things of moderate value, when it becomes nearly synonymous with barter. Sale is commonly limited to the transfer of property for money, or for something estimated at a money value or considered as equivalent to so much money. A deal in the political sense is a bargain, substitution, or transfer for the benefit of certain persons or parties against all others; as, The nomination was the result of a deal; in business it may have a similar meaning, but it frequently signifies simply a sale or exchange, a dealing.

Its function is to indicate, now chiefly in formal discourse: 1 In the first person, simple futurity, with a matter-of-fact attitude toward the action or state projected: We shall take only the usual precautions. (But see usage note below.) 2 In the second and third persons, futurity combined with a mood or feeling of: a Determination: They shall not pass. b Promise: You shall have whatever you need. c Threat: You shall pay for this. d Command: No one shall twice be put in jeopardy. e Inevitability: When earthly time shall end, will life survive? 3 In all persons, indefinite future time in conditional statements: If and when you or we or the divers shall locate the treasure, it will (or, in legal use, the mandatory shall) be shared out according to the agreement. 4 In all persons, futurity involving ideal certainty, in clauses following expressions of anxiety, demand, or desire: They are anxious, indeed insist, that you or I or both of us shall go, rather than any outsider. [OE sceal I am obliged, 1st person sing. of sceolan]

◆ shall vs. will The traditional view on the use of shall and will is that to indicate simple futurity shall is used in the first person, will in the second and third; their roles are reversed to express determination, promise, threat, command, inevitability, etc.; while in questions, the choice between them depends on which one is expected in the answer. These statements hold fairly well for legal usage, but they are too arbitrary to describe accurately the facts of current American usage in speech and writing, except at the most stilted formal level. Shall and will have had a tendency gradually to exchange roles once each century since 1500, and during the present century it has been the turn of will to make its way into the lead. In the important task of indicating simple future time in the first person, will has largely replaced shall, aided in doing so by the leveling effect of the contraction 'll: I'll (= I will or I shall) be free at ten. Shall, thus displaced, takes on one role assigned by traditional formula to will, and is used in the first person to express determination plus inevitability, as in General MacArthur's "I shall return" and Winston Churchill's " . . . and win we shall." If will in the first person is to express determination according to the formula, it must be stressed or qualified in some way: I will too go out and play. In questions in the first person, shall is still commonly used to express the simple future, but it is also found as the hortatory shall, either humorously formal: Shall we (= Let's) dance? or politely threatening: Shall we (= Let's) do it my way for once. Again, will has won out over shall when it comes to giving routine or polite, as distinct from peremptory, commands: You will proceed to Hill 90 and occupy it. The peremptory shall in the second person is now usually replaced, except in legal usage, by will with have to: You will have to (= shall) go whether you want to or not. It is hazardous to try to sum up the present position of these two forms, but with the few exceptions noted, in American usage will now usually indicates the simple future in all persons, while shall expresses the future complicated by some feeling about it.
